

Arthur Storch

Inspector Arthur Storch (NYPD, retired) has a 23-year history of achievement in the NYPD and a distinguished record in law enforcement training and police consulting. Inspector Storch served as the commanding officer of three narcotics boroughs (Manhattan North, Brooklyn South and Queens), Internal Affairs Zone II, the 106 Precinct, the Personnel Bureau's Staff Services Section and the Career Criminal Monitoring Unit. In every one of these commands, Inspector Storch developed innovative strategies that resulted in unprecedented crime reduction, dismantling of entrenched and violent gangs, and improvement of services.

Over 6 years as a Narcotics Borough Commander yielded too many results to list. Some of the highlights are listed here. In Manhattan North Narcotics, he supervised the highly successful gun/gang investigation into the Netas, which traced the purchased weapons to the source in Georgia. Operation Trojan Horse attacked high-level drug dealing from inside of Washington Heights. The Model Block program cleaned up entrenched drug gangs and returned the community to the public who were imprisoned in their own homes. In Brooklyn South, he supervised the most successful gang case in the history of NYPD, which resulted in the complete removal of the hierarchy of the Latin Kings and over 100 of its members. The clean up of Red Hook Houses became the model of housing development investigations, dubbed Operation Good Neighbor. In that case, over 200 case buys were made into 160 drug dealers. The 6 gangs that controlled that development were completely eradicated. In Queens Narcotics, numerous major cases into the upper echelons of Colombian cartels resulted in multiple high level arrests and record setting seizures of drugs and money. Another newsworthy case involved the identification and dismantlement of 4 drug gangs that controlled drug dealing in Lefrak City. Over 100 members of these gangs were arrested, resulting in a drug free environment for Lefrak City.

While commanding Internal Affairs Zone II, Inspector Storch personally supervised an insurance fraud case that involved one member of the department who entered over 160 fraudulent accident reports.

During his one year as the commanding officer of the 106 Precinct, Inspector Storch developed crime strategies that became models for NYPD and resulted in a record crime reduction (25%). He forged strong ties with the community who donated over $23,000 to purchase bicycles and bicycle uniforms for the officers of the 106 Precinct. Those ties still exist today as he is still asked to appear as an honored guest at many functions there.

Inspector Storch has taught over 10,000 members of NYPD, studying for promotion and over a thousand other members during investigative and post promotion courses. In addition, he was an Adjunct Lecturer and John Jay College of Criminal Justice for 8 years, where he taught numerous police science classes.

Inspector Storch is an expert in reengineering law enforcement agencies, initially performing that function for Police Commissioner Lee Brown and then Police Commissioner William Bratton. This experience has led to consulting contracts with police departments in Hartford, Connecticut; Cincinnati, Ohio; and Caracas, Venezuela.
